

provide some cover and protection from the cats which seem to be constantly present, particularly in the north-eastern corner of the "wild area".

Thistles appear to be becoming a problem in the northern section of the churchyard, and will eventually out compete the grasses. Many of these should be removed by frequent cutting or pulling to prevent seeding and further spread.

To encourage more small mammals, which are essential prey items for owls, and hedgehogs – a dedicated compost heap area is created in a corner. This would also provide habitat for amphibians or reptiles such as slow-worm.
